A working MBA — built as 74 songs — and what one founder learned about memory

BODY

Hi team,

A founder built an entire MBA-grade curriculum as a 74-song album. It's launched, paying students are inside, and the recall data is unusual: one-listen retention is roughly four times what cohorts get from a slide deck or TED-style explainer.

If you have anyone covering the future of credentials, AI-and-learning, or post-degree workforce education, this might land cleanly. Happy to send a 90-second studio cut, anonymized retention data from early students, or just the founder for a call.

If it's not your beat right now, no problem at all.

Guest pitch for Acquired: an MBA built as a 74-song album

BODY

Hi Ben + David,

Long-time listener — your Beatles and Disney episodes are why I'm reaching out. The founder I work with, Josh Wark, spent twenty years writing songs and the last two writing them as business lessons. The result is MBA Rock — 74 fully produced songs that teach unit economics, Porter, behavioral finance, ESG strategy, the whole curriculum.

It's live with paying students, and the founder-story arc maps almost perfectly to the format you cover. Best moments would be: why an MBA curriculum should look like a Beatles album, what songs encode that slides can't, and a live walk-through of one framework set to music.

Audio samples ready if any of that lands.

BODY

Hi Lenny,

Your readers are exactly our prospect base — PMs, founders, and operators learning growth and product on the side. A founder built MBA Rock: 74 fully produced songs, each one a complete business lesson. Adopt-the-Loop is literally a song. So is Five Forces.

It's running, paying students are inside, and retention numbers are unusual enough to be worth a paragraph. Happy to share the data, the format, or just send you the song that uses Reforge's growth-loops framework directly.

If it's not a fit right now, no worries at all — just say.

A small note from someone applying your aggregation thinking to education

BODY

Hi Ben,

Your "Education as a Service" and "End of MOOCs" pieces shaped how the founder I work with built MBA Rock. He turned an MBA-grade curriculum into 74 fully produced songs — not "lectures with background music," actual songs — and is now running it as a $499 product with paying students.

If you ever want a concrete case study on what "credential disaggregation + format innovation" looks like in practice, this is one. Happy to send a single-page write-up. If not, no worries — just wanted to thank you for the framework.

Pitch: a working MBA delivered as a 74-song album

BODY

Hi team,

EdSurge readers will recognize the gap: corporate L&D, executive education, and most online programs all rely on the same lecture-plus-slides format. The founder of MBA Rock built an alternative — 74 songs, each a complete business lesson — and shipped the full course this month. 74 lessons, 65 original songs, 74 explainer videos, $499.

The retention research underneath it (Calvert & Tart, 1993; Wallace, 1994) gives it real legs. Would a quick interview or product round-up entry work for you?

If timing's off, totally understand.

New format pilot for executive education — pitching a brief

BODY

Hi team,

Could be a tight piece for Inside Higher Ed's innovation desk. A founder built a complete MBA-grade curriculum as a musical album — 74 fully produced songs, each carrying a framework. He's running pilots with executive-ed programs and is open to talking on the record about pedagogy, retention research, and the licensing model with business schools.

Music-anchored business literacy — relevant for the 2027 financial-literacy mandates

BODY

Hi team,

You've been tracking the wave of state-level financial-literacy mandates coming online by 2027. The founder of MBA Rock has built an album-based curriculum (74 songs, 74 explainer videos, calculators, worksheets) and is preparing a PreK-12 version called the Album Method™. Districts piloting it would have an actually-listenable format students will engage with at home.

If there's any interest in early-mover district stories or the format itself, I can connect you with the founder this week.

Most Innovative pitch: An MBA you can hum

BODY

Hi team,

Fast Company loves a clean format-innovation story. MBA Rock turned an MBA-grade curriculum into 74 fully produced songs — operator's frameworks, unit economics, behavioral finance, all set to music. It's not "songs about business," it's the curriculum itself, taught by ear.

The course is live, paying students are inside, and the founder's bench includes twenty years as a songwriter before this. If you're scouting Most Innovative Companies in Education, this should be on the radar. Happy to send a 5-minute studio sample.

Pitch for HBR.org — what music does to executive learning

BODY

Hi team,

A possible HBR.org piece, with the founder of MBA Rock as the byline or quoted source. The argument: music-anchored retrieval cues (Calvert & Tart, 1993; Wallace, 1994) deliver materially better recall in executive learning contexts than the slide-and-video formats that dominate corporate L&D today. He's tested the claim in a working 74-song MBA curriculum and can ship data.

Pitch: What if business school sounded like an album?

BODY

Hi team,

A long-form Ideas piece could live here: a founder spent two years rewriting business-school content as 74 fully produced songs. The cultural angle is what makes it Atlantic-shaped — what credentialing has become, what music has always done for memory, and what happens when an industry's training catalogue is delivered the way Frank Ocean delivers a record.

The course is live. The founder is candid. Happy to send a sample track and a draft outline.

New L&D format for CHROs — pitching a Work column piece

BODY

Hi team,

Possible angle for the Work column: CHROs are trying to teach business literacy to first-line managers, and the standard playbook (LMS modules, Loom videos, MBA tuition reimbursement) doesn't move the needle on retention. The founder of MBA Rock has built an album-based alternative — 74 fully produced songs, $499 for individuals, with corporate licensing already in pilot.

Programming pitch — music-anchored adult learning for NYPL patrons

BODY

Dear team,

NYPL's adult-learning and entrepreneurship programs make a natural fit for MBA Rock — a 74-song MBA-grade curriculum already running with paying students. We'd love to offer NYPL a free six-month institutional license for patron access, plus an optional one-hour live "listening session" event format if you'd like to anchor a program around it.

Briefing doc available on request.

SUBJECT

Free six-month pilot for BPL — MBA Rock

BODY

Dear team,

Boston is one of the most credential-saturated markets in the country, which makes BPL's adult programming a natural test bed for a new format. MBA Rock is a 74-song MBA-grade curriculum (frameworks set to music). We'd like to offer BPL a free six-month institutional license for patron access.

Programming proposal — MBA Rock as adult business-literacy programming

BODY

Dear team,

Chicago Public Library's entrepreneurship programming is the strongest in the country for a public-library system. MBA Rock is a 74-song MBA-grade curriculum that could plug directly into your adult-learning catalog — free six-month institutional license, optional in-person listening event.

Brief ready. Open to a 15-minute intro call.

Partnership pitch — MBA Rock for YC Startup School

BODY

Dear team,

YC Startup School graduates lots of founders without MBA-grade business literacy. MBA Rock is a 74-song MBA-grade curriculum built precisely for that audience — operators and post-degree founders who need real frameworks fast.

Two possible models: (1) free institutional access for Startup School completions, (2) a YC-branded version with co-marketing. Open to either.

Partnership pitch — MBA Rock across the Techstars network

BODY

Dear team,

I'm reaching out on behalf of MBA Rock. We've already drafted an L&D pitch for Techstars at the corporate level; this note widens the ask to an institutional license — every accelerator MD and program manager in the Techstars network could offer MBA Rock as a default to portfolio founders.

Would a 20-minute exploratory call work this quarter?

SUBJECT

Possible AngelList Learn integration — MBA Rock

BODY

Dear team,

AngelList Learn could become the natural entry point for new founders into MBA-grade business literacy. MBA Rock is a 74-song MBA-grade curriculum already running with paying customers — and a strong candidate for an AngelList-perk or co-branded edition.

Open to a 20-minute intro call.

Music-anchored business literacy for Spotify managers — pilot offer

BODY

Hi {{First}},

Spotify is the most natural corporate partner MBA Rock will ever have — a music company piloting a music-based business curriculum. MBA Rock is a 74-song MBA-grade curriculum already running with paying students.

We'd like to offer a free 60-day pilot for a 25-person group of Spotify managers. No fee, no contract — just feedback. May I send a 2-page brief?

Pilot offer for Shake Shack — operator-grade content for general managers

BODY

Hi {{First}},

Shake Shack's hiring tempo means GMs step into operator roles before they have the playbook. MBA Rock is a 74-song MBA-grade curriculum (unit economics, ops, leadership, scenarios) — built to compress that playbook into a format your GMs will actually use.
